Some Parting Messages Found in The Business Managers Memory Book

We have come to the parting of the ways, and I must bid you good bye. Please take with you my best wishes for your welfare and happiness.

Your Math teacher,
H. J. McIlhany

In any game the winner is the one who puts the most into it. Life is really a game, and the one who plays it for all they are worth will win. Give it the best there is in you and it will be kind to you.

My wish is that you succeed in whatever you undertake. I know you can if you will.

Sincerely,
D. A. Mayhew

I would like to express the best possible wish for your future life. What shall it be? I am going to guess it be this: I wish you to project your happy school days through the experiences of life so that the same friendly spirit of your school life will delight your friends through the coming years bringing happiness to yourself and delight to your companions and associates.

Sincerely,
A. C. Ferguson

"There's a world of capability; for joy, spread round about us, meant for us, inviting us."

My wish is that the whole of joy meant for you may be yours. You are a dear girl, and Im glad our paths met.

Sincerely,
Della Adams

Life is a business from which we desire great profits - happiness and success. May your gains be great is the wish of your friend,

Mrs. Grizzard

It is with a tinge of sadness that friends come to "the parting of the ways;" but this is what happens every springtime, between student and teacher, when graduation marks another milestone along the pathway of an institution's acheivments, and sends it's seniors, in their accomplishments, on to a further search of knowledge or to a broader experience in the big broad world.

Our associations have indeed been pleasant ones to me, and I hope, to some extent, profitable ones to you; because I hope that what little influence I have had upon your high school career has been one for good, and for sound constructive development of character that will stand the test of time.

Then when you are sailing far out over life's intrepid sea of acheivments, joys, sorrows triumphs or failures, and experience the conflicting emotions that you will in the viccissitudes of life, my wish is that memories of your high school days will always bring with them the realization that life is worth while, and that it is worth putting forth the best there is in you, at all times, however hard the fight.

Sincerely,
Wilson T. Betts
