SOCIAL HISTORY OF THE CLASS

Without doubt, the class of '27 has been one of the most congenial that has ever gone through High School. There has ever been a spirit of unexcelled cooperation and good sportsmanship in every activity which the class has entered. Naturally, with such an existing spirit, the social life of our class would be of a very high standard.

Even as Freshmen, we displayed an unusual amount of social spirit when we entertained with a Valentine party at the home of Louise Barnett. Every Senior remembers that night and probably recalls that Georgia Mae Green was the hero of the night, dressed as a negro boy.

As Sophomores we were even more unified. The crowning social affair of that year was the Sophomore "Kid Party," which was given at the home of Evelyne Phillips. Miss Adams was our sponsor and filled that position most admirably.

But although our classes were bound together during the two previous years, our greatest amount of ingenuity and class organization was observed in our third year, as Juniors. With Miss Liles as our sponsor, we entertained the Senior class with a party, and at the end of school a buffet luncheon. These two affairs were carried off with such smoothness and cooperative spirit that only a faithful sponsor and good will among the students could have made possible.

This year our class claimed Miss Liles as its sponsor again, and the same cooperative spirit which was evident in the Junior class has been present with us as Seniors. It has been our time, however, to accept the courtesies of the Junior class, and it was indeed an appreciative crowd that gathered for the Junior-Senior party just before Christmas. A Saint Patrick's Day Senior-Junior party was the next affair, and in this, as before, the social spirit was at its height.

As we look back over our four high school years, we are justly proud of the class spirit which has been displayed. Our hope is that such a spirit dear old M. H. S.
may follow each individual of the class and keep alive the memories of
